Consciousness, at its simplest, is sentience or awareness of internal and external existence. Despite millennia of analyses, definitions, explanations and debates by philosophers and scientists, consciousness remains puzzling and controversial, being "at once the most familiar and [also the] most mysterious aspect of our lives". Perhaps the only widely agreed notion about the topic is the ...

In contrast to computational accounts of the mind that model consciousness in terms of input, processing, and output, phenomenological accounts ground consciousness in a host of rich and varied attentional experiences, which with practice can be described and analyzed. For more on phenomenology, see see the entry on phenomenology.

Ken wasn't just a social drinker; he would drink as many as 8 pints a day, 3-4 times in a week (because that was how often he was partying). He also wasn't just a smoker but a heavy one who smoked 12-15 cigarettes daily. However, Ken had such a great character and big heart that I didn't want to forgo this connection.

Different Defenses for Conscious and Unconscious Death-Related Thoughts. TMT posits that people manage death anxiety with two distinct systems, referred to as proximal and distal defenses (Pyszczynski et al., 1999). When death-related thoughts are conscious (in current focal attention), proximal defenses are activated to suppress such thoughts or push death into the distant future by denying ...
